UAW, GM discuss impact of some models' sales slump

Cruze not cited, but report characterizes Lordstown plant as 'underused' facility

By GRAIG GRAZIOSI

LORDSTOWN
The president of the United Auto Workers union, Dennis Williams, said in a Thursday news release that there have been discussions with General Motors concerning the future production of plants that primarily produce "slower-selling" vehicle models.

According to a Reuters report, which cites anonymous sources "familiar with the plans," GM is considering "killing" six slower-selling models, including the Buick LaCrosse, Cadillac CT6 and XTS, and Chevrolet Impala, Volt and Sonic.

The GM Lordstown Assembly Complex, as well as the Hamtramck Assembly Complex in Michigan, were mentioned by name in the report and were characterized as "underused" facilities.

Though the Lordstown plant does not produce any of the six brands mentioned in the report – it produces only the Chevrolet Cruze – workers at the plant have felt the impact of a recent shift in consumer preference toward larger vehicles such as SUVs and crossovers.

The Lordstown plant's third shift was cut last year, and Monday will be the first day back for Lordstown workers after a five-week shutdown caused in part by

New motions in Hamad case focus on possible death penalty

By ED RUNYAN
runyan@vindy.com

WARREN
Several of the motions filed by attorneys for Nasser Hamad in his aggravated-murder case focus on reducing the chance that Hamad could get the death penalty if he's convicted of killing two people at his Howland home in February.

Hamad, 48, of state Route 46, is charged with aggravated murder in the shooting deaths of two people and attempted aggravated murder in the wounding of three others who police say went to his house Feb. 25.

Police say Hamad shot all five after a day of Facebook taunts among Hamad and some of the victims, which caused the five to drive to his house for a fistfight.

After a fistfight between Hamad and one of the five, Hamad went into his house, got a gun, returned to the front yard and fired at the five, police said.

A recent motion by his attorneys asks that Judge Ronald Rice of Trumbull County Common Pleas Court order prosecutors to turn over any evidence they possess that is favorable to Hamad's defense, especially that which "tends to mitigate the penalty or extenuate the circumstances of the crime."

The filing adds that an example is "any evidence that

Y-town Thermal customers will face surcharge

Company's problems prompt PUCO's order

By SARAH LEHR
slehr@vindy.com

YOUNGSTOWN
Youngstown Thermal customers will face surcharges due to the company's flagging finances.

The Public Utilities Commission of Ohio voted during a special meeting Friday evening to establish the emergency surcharge on rates.

The amount of the surcharge is not yet determined, but an order issued Friday states it must bring in sufficient revenue to allow the company to compensate its skilled workers. Youngstown Thermal recently has had problems making payroll on time.

"Youngstown Thermal is in imminent danger of insolvency and an emergency surcharge is necessary to maintain heating and cooling service to downtown Youngstown," the order states.

PUCO's staff will file a recommendation within seven days regarding the surcharge amount. The commission will then vote on the issue.

Friday's order also directs Youngstown Thermal to establish a segregated escrow

A newly purchased fire engine heads toward Austintown as firefighters Nick Reed and Lt. Dave Schertzer drive the vehicle home. Set between them on the dashboard is the helmet belonging to the late John Fritz.

Fritz died at 48 on June 27, 2016, while on duty. About a year later, the fire department purchased a new engine that bears Fritz's name and his retired unit number, 181, on its side.

Assistant Chief Bob Williams said the decision to put Fritz's name on the engine was a given.

"John was the kind of guy that if somebody needed help, he would be there," said Jill Ferrone, Fritz's sister.

She and her father, Richard Fritz, said John was constantly working on projects

White House press secretary Sean Spicer speaks during the daily press briefing at the White House in Washington.

Spicer exits as Trump shakes up press team

Associated Press

WASHINGTON
White House press secretary Sean Spicer abruptly resigned Friday over President Donald Trump's decision to tap a camera-ready financier to lead the beleaguered White House communications team. The departing spokesman said the president "could benefit from a clean slate" as he seeks to steady operations amid the Russia investigations and ahead of a health care showdown.

Spicer, whose daily briefings once dominated cable television and delighted late-night comics, quit in protest over the hiring of Anthony Scaramucci as the new White House communications director. Spicer denounced what he considered Scaramucci's lack of qualifications, according to people familiar with the situation.

As his first act on the job, Scaramucci, a polished television commentator and Harvard Law graduate, announced from the White House briefing room that Sarah Huckabee Sanders would take Spicer's job. She had been Spicer's deputy. The shake-up among the president spokespeople comes as Trump is suffering from dismal approval ratings and struggling to advance his legislative proposals. As his effort to replace Barack Obama's health care law crumbled this week, the president continued to vent frustration about the attention devoted to investigations of allegations of his election campaign's connections to Russia. Trump has blamed his own messengers — as well as the "fake news" media — for his woes.

Trump, who watches the press briefings closely and believes he is his own best spokesman, saluted Spicer's "great ratings" on TV and said he was "grateful for Sean's work on behalf of my administration and the American people."

Scaramucci, who said Spicer had been gracious in showing him around Friday, quickly took center stage, parrying questions from reporters and praising Trump in a 37-minute charm offensive. He flashed the television skills that Trump has long valued: He commended Trump's political instincts and competitiveness, cracked a few self-deprecating jokes and battled with reporters who categorized the West Wing as dysfunctional, saying "there is a disconnect" between the media and the way the public sees the president. "The president has really good karma and the world turns back to him," Scaramucci said.

Spicer said during a brief phone conversation with The Associated Press that he felt it would be best for Scaramucci to build his own operation "and chart a new way forward." He tweeted that it had been an "honor" and "privilege" to serve Trump and that he would remain in his post through August.

His decision to quit took advisers inside and outside the White House by surprise, according to people with knowledge of the decision. They spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the personnel matter publicly. Spicer's daily press briefings had become must-see TV until recent weeks when he took a more behind-the-scenes role. Sanders has largely taken over the briefings, turning them into off-camera events.

The White House had been looking for a new communications director for several weeks, but struggled to attract an experienced Republican hand. Scaramucci, a former Democrat — like Trump — who once called his new boss a "hack politician," began seriously talking to the White House about the position this week, and the president offered him the job Friday morning.

Milo Yiannopoulos weighs in on Trump and Ariana Grande

NEW YORK
Right-wing provocateur Milo Yiannopoulos calls himself the "most fabulous supervillain on the internet" and that's probably not an exaggeration. He's angered everyone from liberals to the alt-right with his controversial comments.

His Twitter account was suspended after a series of racially insensitive tweets aimed at "Ghostbusters" actress Leslie Jones. His defense of sexual relationships between men and boys cost him his job at Breitbart News and a book deal with Simon and Schuster. He apologized for joking about such a serious issue, but said he thought he could get away with it since he says he's a survivor himself.

Recently, the 32-year-old who sees himself more as "lovable rogue" than a hatemonger and whose self-published autobiography "Dangerous" is an Amazon best-seller, sat down with The Associated Press to clarify his stance on a variety of issues.

Yiannopoulos

TRUMP AS A GAY-FRIENDLY PRESIDENT

Yiannopoulos calls Donald Trump the most gay-friendly president in history, claiming he judges the man on his actions more than his words.

"[Trump] said he would not seek to change gay marriage, or equal marriage, as the left likes to call it. He said he didn't mind what bathroom Caitlyn Jenner wants to use."

The Republican president broke from Barack Obama's practice of issuing a proclamation in honor of Pride Month, but Yiannopoulos says "it doesn't bother me."

"I don't care about that. What I care about is the president protecting gay people from foreign policy, through strong borders, and stuff like that. I think you will find a lot of Republican gays believe that, too. ... They don't care about rainbow flags on twitter icons. They don't care about celebrities saying love wins after terrorism incidents."

raised more than $13 million.

"Gays are soundly unimpressed by Ariana Grande's reaction to the concert. She should have turned around and struck a blow in culture for the supreme and great values of Western civilization instead of just saying, 'Love wins, let's end hate,' you know. What does that even mean?" he says.

"She could have said radical Islam is evil, murderous, and a threat to the American way of life. The American way of life that has given me so much success and keeps me safe. And how do you know that? Because the first place she flew to be safe right after that happened was back home to the United States."

Easing the burden

YOUNGSTOWN

For the second year, the Youngstown City School District will buy school supplies for students.

"This is a way that we can ease that burden on our families. We want all of the students to be prepared for the start of the school year, and we want to help with that," said CEO Krish Mohip.

The 2017-18 school year also will be the second year that the district opted against school uniforms. Uniforms had been in place in YCSD for several years, but Mohip, after convening a panel of stakeholders before the start of the 2016-17 school year, decided to eliminate that requirement. A school dress code, however, remains in effect.

Park improvements

YOUNGSTOWN

Mill Creek MetroParks will begin the East Cohasset Improvement Project early next month with an expected completion date of late October. The project will close the East Cohasset Bike and Hike trail from the Ottawa Entrance to Old Furnace Road for the duration of the construction. Planned improvements include drainage maintenance and installation and trail surfacing upgrades.

Charged with OVI

YOUNGSTOWN

Police charged a Girard man who drove his car off the side of a West Side street Thursday with drunken driving after a blood-alcohol test showed he was just over three times the legal limit for impaired driving.

Reports said an officer found a car about 6:45 p.m. off the side of the street at Calvary Run and South Belle Vista Avenue driven by Ewen Berwick, 36, of West Liberty Street, who said he had just come from a West Side bar and had "three pints and three shots."

Berwick smelled of alcohol, was staggering in the street and had slurred speech, reports said. Reports said he failed a field-sobriety test and took a breath test, which showed a blood-alcohol content of .328. In Ohio, a person is considered driving drunk if they have a BAC of .08 or higher.

Berwick was issued his citations and released to his mother-in-law, reports said.

Lane restrictions

State Route 11 between the Interstate 80/Interstate 680 split and U.S. Route 224 in Austintown and Canfield townships will have various daily lane restrictions for resurfacing and pavement repairs until further notice, said the Ohio Department of Transportation.

This work is part of a $3.8 million project to resurface Route 11 between Route 224 and the I-80/I-680 split. The project also includes bridge repairs. The entire project is scheduled to be completed by August 2018.

More road work

Beginning today, state Route 11 between King Graves Road and state Route 5 as well as state Route 534 between U.S. Route 422 and just north of state Route 88 will have lane restrictions until further notice, announced the Ohio Department of Transportation.

The work is part of a $1.1 million project to make pavement repairs in Ashtabula, Mahoning and Trumbull counties scheduled to be completed by late August.

Beginning Monday, state Route 7 in Hartwood Township will be closed between state Routes 82 and 305 through Wednesday for a culvert replacement.

a decline in Cruze sales.

Cruze sales have dropped 30 percent since last year, though individual retail sales are up 3.3 percent, according to a recent report from GM.

Glenn Johnson, president of UAW Local 1112 at Lordstown, said he wasn't aware of any plans by GM to change the product at the Lordstown facility.

"It's GM's decision for where they put their product," Johnson said. "If we get a reallocation, we're just going to show what a great team we've got here at Lordstown and that we've got the right people in place to make it work here."

Jim Cain, national spokesman for GM, said he couldn't confirm the discussion cited by Williams in the Reuters report, but he could confirm that consumers prefer larger vehicles – and that it will impact

GM's production priorities moving forward.

"We've got a strong economy right now and gas prices are low, so we're seeing growing interest in crossover models and the enduring popularity of trucks," Cain said. "Naturally we want to stay as closely in line with customer demand as possible."

might not have the resources to go to a zoo or aquarium is great. And it's necessary for people to realize how important conserving our environment is."

A focus of the presentation was on the penguin's endangered-species status.

The African penguin is native to South Africa. Its beach habitats are threatened by local vacationers, fishing and agricultural industries.

Buildings along the beaches and beachgoers have displaced the bird, leaving the animals unable to breed on swaths of beaches claimed by people.

Guano – excrement from the penguins – used to build the bird's nest is harvested and used as fertilizer. Overfishing has left the penguins with fewer options for food.

"They actually eat more than any other animal in the aquarium," Weber said.

Conservationists have designated parts of the South African coast as safe havens for the penguins, but their population is still an estimated 50,000. In the early 1900s, there were an estimated 1.5 million birds.

The Wave Foundation is composed mostly of volunteer staff members who conduct outreach via presentations, camps and job-shadow programs.

"We have a lot of great people that do a lot for us," said Wave instructor Devin Magner.

Magner said preserving and educating the public about African penguins is a large part of the foundation's focus.

HAMAD

Hamad had been threatened previously by the victims in prior incidents or that police located evidence suggesting that people on the scene carried weapons or instruments that could be used or construed as weapons."

A separate filing asks for police reports prior to Feb. 25 that mention threats to Hamad by the victims. The filing says the reports "may suggest that a sentence of less than death is appropriate."

A reply by prosecutors says: "It is the State's position that any information deemed relevant by defense counsel can and should be obtained through a public records request."

Hamad and his legal counsel have stated that Hamad acted in self-defense, though a legal expert interviewed by The Vindicator says Hamad appears to have had a duty to retreat despite the five coming onto his property.

Hamad was in court Friday for a pretrial hearing in the case. Judge Ronald Rice set another pretrial hearing for 1:30 p.m. Sept 19. Hamad's jury trial is set for 9 a.m. Oct 10.

Three of the newest motions also argue that Ohio's death penalty is unconstitutional and that it violates international law.

Another one argues that the Ohio law is unconstitutional in that it places the burden of proof on Hamad to establish that he acted in self-defense, even though every person accused of an offense is presumed innocent until proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

Prosecutors say Hamad's attempt to use the Second Amendment to keep and bear arms is insufficient to overturn Ohio law regarding self-defense.

Hamad has also asked for the case to be moved to another county, saying that news accounts in the case has "left little room for fact finding at trial."

Judge Rice had not ruled on any of the new motions by the end of the day Friday.

benefiting others.

"He would probably rather not have his name on there," Richard Fritz said. He said his son wasn't much for receiving recognition, and public service was in John's nature. "He'd wanted to be a firefighter his whole life."

He had walked to the Cleveland Clinic in full firefighting gear to raise money for spina bifida research – twice. The spinal condition affected his oldest daughter, Riley.

"He was a fireman's fireman," Capt. Tim O'Hara said. "He took the job very seriously, to the point where it wasn't a job. It was a lifestyle."

Fritz taught firefighting classes with O'Hara at the Mahoning County Career and Technical Center as well.

The new fire engine made its initial public debut at the township's Fourth of July parade with Fritz's children riding inside. O'Hara said the crowd's reaction to the fire engine was different from those in past years.

Instead of solely clapping, people in the crowd were pointing to the side of the truck, noting Fritz's name.

"If your eyes don't fill up with tears when you see it, you're not human," said township Trustee Jim Davis. "I knew John as his boss, but I know what he means to those guys at the fire station. That's what gets me, just knowing what he meant to the community."

Fritz was a black belt in karate, scuba diver and an adept tuba and sousaphone player, to the point that he couldn't fit all of his music awards on his band uniform.

Richard Fritz, Ferrone and O'Hara all agreed John was serious at work, but playful by nature. When the lights are out in the kitchen and captain's room of the fire department, glow-in-the-dark smiling faces are on the walls. They were Fritz's doing.

The fire engine is still being outfitted, but Williams said it likely will be in service in August. The truck is equipped with a train horn, due to soundproof vehicle interiors.

"In 15 years someone is going to ask who he is, and we'll be able to tell them," O'Hara said. "Of all the accolades John received, dedicating the truck to him is the most important, at least I think so."

account for depositing future customer payments. The order states the account is necessary because of the company's "poor record-keeping" in the past.

Youngstown Thermal is a utilities company that uses steam for heating and cooling. Carl Avers, chief executive officer of Youngstown Thermal, contacted PUCO, a state regulator, in June about a potential "energy crisis" in downtown Youngstown due to the company's inability to meet expenses in a timely manner.

PUCO has since asked the Ohio Attorney General's Office to step in and appoint a receiver to right Youngstown Thermal's finances. That matter is ongoing in the Mahoning County Court of Common Pleas.

PUCO has not taken that type of legal action with a utilities company since 1987.

"It is rare," said PUCO spokesman Matt Schilling.

Youngstown Thermal has about 40 Youngstown customers, including The Vindicator, the city of Youngstown and the Youngstown Business Incubator.

Barb Ewing, chief executive officer of the Youngstown Business Incubator, said the company anticipated surcharges due to Youngstown Thermal's financial problems.

She said there is "no chance" the YBI will seek another heating and cooling provider.

"It is simply too expensive for us to retrofit the building for a new system," Ewing said.

Avers said he is not concerned customers will leave Youngstown Thermal due to the surcharges. Avers said customers will see lower prices in the future because of new fuel sources and technology.

Avers added that Youngstown Thermal is working with PUCO to "solve the short-term and long-term situation" and emphasized that services will not be interrupted. He also termed record-keeping issues as "minor."

The company has attributed its financial problems, in part, to the loss of its largest customer, Youngstown State University. The company also has pointed to the failure of several customers to pay their bills.

Youngstown Thermal contends the city of Youngstown owes $141,570 due to years of underbilling, stemming from a broken meter. The city disputes that figure.

Friday's order states PUCO's staff will review disputed bills and make recommendations for each situation. If a customer does not agree with a recommendation, the customer will have the opportunity for a hearing before the commission.

Youngstown Thermal put its assets up for sale in June.

Police: Killing in parking lot was 'senseless'

By JOE GORMAN
jgorman@windy.com

YOUNGSTOWN

More information trickled out Friday about the murder of a Masury man last November after two Columbus men were indicted in his death.

Lt. Doug Bobovnyk said that the killing of Joshua Beasley, 34, early Nov. 6, 2016, in the parking lot of the Four Seasons Flea Market was especially senseless because Beasley gave his wallet to the two men accused of killing him after the two pulled a gun on him.

Accused are brothers David Emera Deshaw Madumelu, 24, also known as David Kitchen; and Daniel Kitchen, 26, also known as Daniel James Madumelu.

But they still shot and killed Beasley, who had stopped his motorcycle in the parking lot to text a woman and ask her to meet him later, Bobovnyk said.

"They didn't have to kill him," Bobovnyk said. "It was senseless."

The two were indicted Thursday by a Mahoning County grand jury on charges of aggravated robbery and aggravated murder for the death of Beasley and on charges of attempted murder, felonious assault and being a felon in possession of a firearm for a double shooting the day after Beasley was killed on Cohasset Drive that detectives did not know until weeks later was linked to the murder.

Madumelu and Kitchen, who are brothers, were arrested a few days later along with a woman by Columbus police. Because they were arrested with a .40-caliber handgun and had a history of committing the same kinds of crimes that had led to the death of Beasley, Bobovnyk and Detective Sgt. Ronald Rodway traveled to Columbus Nov. 30, 2016, to interview the woman about the double shooting on Cohasset Drive.

Police had recovered a .40-shell casing where Beasley was shot and .40-caliber shell casings from the double shooting on Cohasset Drive. When interviewing the woman, she told police she thought one of the victims was targeted because she witnessed Beasley's murder.

Madumelu

Kitchen

Bobovnyk and Rodway said that revelation was a shock. Bobovnyk said other than the shell casing, police had no evidence to work with in Beasley's death.

"We had no idea the cases would tie together," Bobovnyk said.

The case is one that shows that detectives always have to be willing to follow up on any leads or tips they get, Bobovnyk said. He credited Rodway for the work he did on the case.

"This is one instance where you have to beat the pavement and talk to people," Bobovnyk said.

Bobovnyk said Madumelu and Kitchen were in Youngstown to attend the death of a family member. He said when they were arrested in Columbus on aggravated robbery charges, they were held without bond so detectives could build their case without having to worry about them going anywhere.

Columbus police tested the gun found when the brothers were arrested and it matched the gun used in Beasley's death and the Cohasset Drive shootings.

Bobovnyk also thanked Columbus police for their help, including the use of its crime lab at no cost.

Madumelu and Kitchen were both sentenced to 17 years in state prison Wednesday after guilty pleas to weapons and aggravated robbery charges in Franklin County Common Pleas Court.

Woman dies in wreck

Staff report

KINSMAN

The Southington Post of the Ohio State Highway Patrol said a Negley woman was killed about 10:15 p.m. Thursday on state Route 7 north of Webber Cole Road after a deer that was hit by another car corkscrewed through the air and went through the windshield of the car she was in, striking her.

A news release from the patrol said a car driven by Jerome Hough, 69, of Williamsfield, was driving north when his car collided with a deer.

The deer then traveled through the air and went through the windshield of a car driven by Daniel L. Stoneburner, 37, of Negley. The woman next to him in the passenger seat, Amy M. Stoneburner, 39, was hit by the deer and pronounced dead at the scene.

Two children in the back seat, 9 and 12 years old respectively, and Daniel Stoneburner were all taken to St. Elizabeth Youngstown Hospital to be treated for minor injuries. No one in Hough's car was injured.

Woman arrested after chase

Staff report

YOUNGSTOWN

A woman who was a passenger in an SUV that led Mill Creek MetroPark police on a chase about 11 a.m. was taken into custody on a warrant after park police spotted the SUV she was in on a South Side street.

MetroParks Police Chief Jim Willock said the woman had a warrant and additional charges may be filed because officers found suspected drug paraphernalia in the car.

Willock said officers tried to pull the car over on Old Furnace Road in the park but the driver failed to stop. The male driver led officers on a short chase before it was terminated because it was becoming too dangerous, Willock said.

Officers checked the surrounding streets and found the car in the 100 block of West Delason Avenue. The passenger was still in the car but the man ran away. City police also arrived to assist. Police chose not to identify the woman at this time.

Valley science and technology group meets to talk innovation

By GRAIG GRAZIOSI
ggraziosi@windy.com

WARREN

Innovation is intentional. That was the central focus of a presentation given during a meeting of the Valley Alliance for Science and Technology on Friday.

Hosted at the Tech Belt Energy Innovation Center in Warren – a technology and energy company incubator and proving grounds for developed products – the discussion examined how to cultivate a favorable company culture to spur innovation and argued that idea development should be treated as an intentional pursuit rather than a result of fortuitous chance.

Mike O'Donnell, vice president of operations at the Manufacturing Advocacy and Growth Network (MAGNET) – a state-supported consulting group aimed at growing Northeast Ohio manufacturers – was the featured speaker.

O'Donnell gave the gathered technology specialists a crash course in strategies for maximizing innovation in their companies. He advised companies to develop leadership strategies that prioritized innovation and to be willing to take well-researched risks to grow their new ideas.

Dave Nestic, the executive-in-residence at TBEIC, said the event was meant as a way to allow technology professionals to network with other like-minded professionals and engage with potential resources, such as MAGNET.

"Today's talk was important because innovation is the genesis of new product development," Nestic said. "Developing a process for ideation accelerates that development and makes innovation and intentional goal."

MAGNET works with Northeast Ohio manufacturing companies to help them think up, develop and sell new products and works with companies at any stage of a product's development.

"We come in and work face-to-face with these companies, whether its in pre-development, ideation, developing production, staffing issues or even marketing and sales," O'Donnell said. "We want to be a one-stop shop."

Emily Lipovan, a manufacturing liaison at MAGNET, characterized the network as a "toolbox for growth," and said that underwriting from the state through funds from Ohio's manufacturing extension partnership allowed it to take on consulting jobs that – while beneficial to local business growth – would have been otherwise cost-prohibitive to a strictly private company.

She said companies that were aware of MAGNET's existence were pleased with the results of their work.

"Once they find out who we are and what we do, it's easy. People want to work with us," she said.

MARY LAMPADARIOS, 90

CAMPBELL - Funeral services will be held Monday at 11 a.m. at St. Nicholas Greek Orthodox Church in Youngstown, officiated by Fr. Joseph DiStefano, for Mary Lampadarios, 90, who passed away Tuesday evening.

Mary was born Nov. 20, 1926, in Kalamyos, Greece, to parents Sakellarios and Angeliki Gerakios Tsangaris.

She was the oldest of five siblings, and was 11 years old when her mother was entrusted to God. It was then that Mary became a mother to her siblings. At the age of 20, Mary came to Campbell to be betrothed to her loving husband, Nicholas. Ford says it will fight latest Takata recall

Associated Press

DETROIT
Ford is fighting the latest expansion of the Takata air-bag inflator recall.

Earlier this month, Takata filed documents with the U.S. government adding 2.7 million vehicles to the recall from Ford, Nissan and Mazda. All have inflators with a drying agent that previously were thought to be safe.

But the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has said that Takata tests showed the inflator propellant can degrade and will pose a safety risk if the inflators aren't replaced.

Nissan agreed to recall about 515,000 Versa cars, but Ford and Mazda filed petitions to avoid a recall.

Takata inflators can explode with too much force and spew shrapnel into drivers and passengers. As many as 18 people have died and more than 180 injured due to the problem.

The inflators have caused the largest automotive recall in U.S. history with 42 million vehicles and up to 69 million inflators being called back for repairs.

Takata uses the chemical ammonium nitrate to inflate air bags. But it can deteriorate when exposed to

DIESEL RECALLS WIDEN

German automaker Audi says it will fit up to 850,000 diesel cars with new software to improve their emissions performance, following a similar move by rival Daimler as the auto industry tries to get ahead of public controversy over the technology.

Audi, the luxury brand of the Volkswagen Group, announced the voluntary retrofitting program Friday. The company said in a statement that it "aims to maintain the future viability of diesel engines" and believes the program "will counteract possible bans on vehicles with diesel engines."

The free program will apply to Europe and other markets outside the U.S. and Canada.

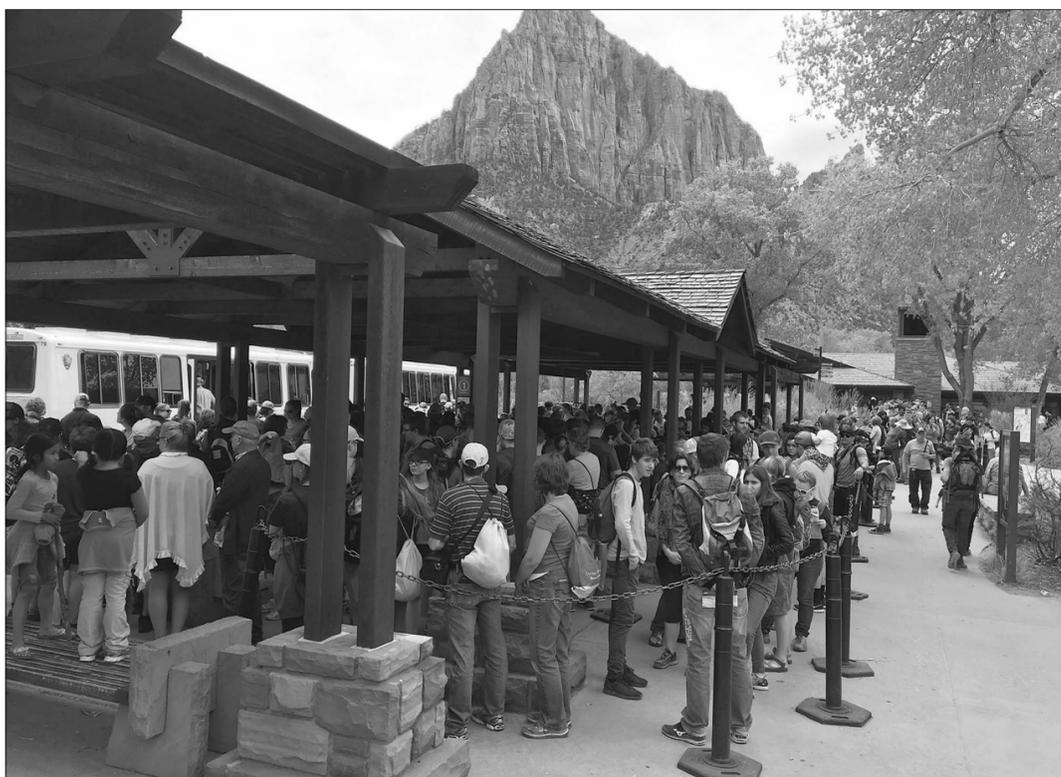

high airborne humidity and high temperatures. Previously the company believed that a drying agent called a desiccant stopped the chemical from degrading. Ford, which has more than 2 million vehicles involved in the latest recall, says the propellant has not deteriorated in any of its inflators taken from vehicles in the field.

The company says it will file a petition with NHTSA to further study its inflators. "At this point there is no data to suggest a recall is needed," the company said in a statement.

Takata also identified about 6,000 Mazda B-Series pickup trucks from 2007 through 2009 that also have the potentially faulty inflators. Mazda, which used to be owned by Ford, said its trucks are based on Ford's Ranger, so it decided to follow Ford in seeking a recall exemption.

Check in to get away

ZION PARK AIMS TO REQUIRE RESERVATIONS

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY
It would be a first for a U.S. national park: requiring reservations to get in. But it's an option that Zion National Park is considering to manage an overwhelming surge of visitors to its sweeping red-rock vistas and canyons in Utah.

Zion, which welcomed 4.3 million people last year, is weighing online reservations for those who want to explore its main canyon. National Park Service rangers struggle to cope with overcrowded tour buses and alleviate damage to Zion's natural wonders, including soil erosion and human waste near trails.

People without reservations could pay an entrance fee and drive through the park, but they couldn't stop to hike or picnic.

"We have to do something," said park spokesman John Marciano. With limited budgets, Zion's Park Service rangers routinely see long lines and plants trampled by visitors who also have cut some 30 miles of their own trails.

Zion isn't the only U.S. national park with swelling numbers of tourists, and at least two national parks, in California and Hawaii, are testing more limited reservation systems for parking. Overall, more than 330 million people visited U.S. national parks in 2016, a record. Visits were bolstered by the improving economy, cheap gas and marketing campaigns for the National Park Service's 2016 centennial.

Zion is the fifth-most-visited park in the national park system. It's particularly susceptible to overcrowding because many of its iconic cliffs and trails are located in the narrow, 6-mile-long Zion Canyon.

The park already urges visitors to take a shuttle between March and November.

After a series of public meetings, Zion rangers are proposing an online reservation system, similar to the way campsites are reserved now. While certain hikes and activities require permits or reservations, the new system would apply to the entire main corridor of the park.

The number of reservations would be based on capacity, would vary by season and could fall somewhere between a manageable 10,000 people a day and an overpowering 30,000 people a day, Marciano said.

One option would require a single reservation to enter and explore the park. A second would allow tourists to enter the park at a specific time and visit specific trails such as Angel's Landing.

Manafort, Trump Jr. in talks with Senate panel

WASHINGTON
President Donald Trump's eldest son and his former campaign chairman have agreed to discuss being privately interviewed by a Senate committee investigating Russia's meddling in the 2016 election, the panel confirmed Friday.

The top Republican and Democrat on the Senate Judiciary committee said Donald Trump Jr. and Paul Manafort agreed to negotiate with the committee about being interviewed by members and staff as well as to discuss the possibility of turning over documents.

The joint statement from Sens. Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, and Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., said the committee will not subpoena the two men to force them to testify publicly next week, though it could do so in the future.

Both men face questions about attending a Trump Tower meeting with a Russian lawyer in June 2016 that was described to Trump Jr.

Minneapolis police chief resigns in wake of shooting

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS

Minneapolis police Chief Janee Harteau resigned Friday amid calls for new leadership in the department following last week's shooting death of an unarmed Australian woman by a police officer.

In a statement released Friday, Harteau said: "I've decided I am willing to step aside to let a fresh set of leadership eyes see what more can be done for the MPD to be the very best it can be."

Minneapolis Mayor Betsy Hodges said she asked for the chief's resignation.

"I've lost confidence in the Chief's ability to lead us further ... it is clear that she has lost the confidence of the people of Minneapolis as well," Hodges said. "For us to continue to transform policing - and community trust in policing - we need new leadership at MPD." Harteau said she was proud of the work she accomplished, but the shooting of 40-year-old Justine Damond by one of her officers, and other incidents, "have caused me to engage in deep reflection."

She added, "Despite the MPD's many accomplishments under my leadership over these years and my love for the city, I have to put the communities we serve first."

Harteau was out of the city on personal time for nearly a week following Saturday's shooting of Damond, a 40-year-old life coach and bride-to-be who was killed by an officer responding to her 911 call of a possible rape.

The state is investigating the shooting. In Harteau's first remarks on the case Thursday - when she returned to work - she was sharply critical of Officer Mohamed Noor while defending his training.

Betty H. Brown Jagnow, *President & Publisher*Mark A. Brown, *General ManagerPast Publishers*William F. Maag Sr., *February 28, 1850–April 10, 1924*William F. Maag Jr., *July 26, 1883–February 29, 1968*William J. Brown, *June 14, 1913–August 14, 1981Our VOICE*McCain's character, style make Congress stronger

ADD OUR VOICE TO THE FLOOD of hope-filled and heart-felt expressions of support that continues to rush westward to Arizona's senior U.S. Sen. John McCain, diagnosed this week with glioblastoma, an aggressive brain tumor.

U.S. Sen. Sherrod Brown, a progressive Democrat from Cleveland, wrote, "John has more fight in him than anyone I know, and I look forward to having him back in the Senate soon. Connie [his wife] and I are thinking of John and his family as we wish him a full recovery."

Likewise, U.S. Sen. Rob Portman, a conservative Republican from the Cincinnati area, also publicly wished McCain well: "Jane & I are sending our love and prayers to @SenJohnMcCain & Cindy [McCain's wife] tonight. We know he will prevail in this fight."

The nearly identical respect and admiration shown by Brown and Portman toward McCain, the Grand Old Party's 2008 presidential nominee, serve as an apt microcosm of the broad-based nationwide outpouring of respect and sincere good wishes for the senator and his family at this most difficult time.

The otherwise hearty 80-year-old was hospitalized July 14 for treatment of a blood clot. During that treatment, doctors detected the brain cancer and performed emergency surgery to successfully remove it. But McCain is far from out of the woods.

That ruthless and unforgiving brain cancer oftentimes returns, as it did in 2009 with U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy and in 2015 with Beau Biden, son of former Vice President Joe Biden, before ultimately taking their lives.

Yet in the true indomitable McCain spirit, the senator will have none of any doomsday talk. In a Twitter posting on Thursday, in fact, he warned his fellow members of the upper chamber of Congress: "I greatly appreciate the outpouring of support – unfortunately for my sparring partners in Congress, I'll be back soon, so stand-by!"

That in-your-face retort typifies McCain's firebrand demeanor of fighting tooth and nail for something he believes in. It complements his other productive qualities of maturity, cooperation and resilience.

Sadly, those critical prerequisites for successful statesmanship have been sorely lacking in recent years from Congress and the entire Washington power structure. The sooner McCain recovers sufficiently to return to Capitol Hill, the sooner his status as a role model for true bipartisanship and patriotism can resume.

Take his maturity. Unlike many of his colleagues on both sides of the political aisle, McCain rarely stoops to ad hominem attacks and juvenile name-calling. When he disagrees – and he disagrees often – with Democrats and those of his own party, he generally does so with logic, reason and civilized discourse. His numerous biting criticisms of President Donald J. Trump's behavior and style serve as foremost cases in point.

That quality feeds directly into his spirit of compromise and bipartisanship. Though he will battle vociferously for causes he believes in, he also will – when appropriate for progress – sit down with opponents and forge plans based on give and take.

A RESILIENT AMERICAN HERO

Finally, take McCain's resilience. Perhaps nothing better illustrates that trait than his grueling military service. As many recall, the former U.S. Navy aviator was shot down, seriously injured, and captured as a prisoner of war by the North Vietnamese in 1967. For the next seven years, McCain was subjected to unrelenting torture yet refused an offer to be freed early out of fairness to his other captured comrades.

That same resilience and sense of fairness has served him and the nation well in his 34 years in the U.S. Congress.

Though we have not always agreed with the policy directions that McCain has driven, we have long respected his stature as a hero and a statesman. Even in our October 2008 endorsement of his Democrat opponent Barack Obama for president, The Vindicator offered this noteworthy concession: "John McCain has performed with distinction in military service and in Congress."

Few could disagree that Congress today desperately needs that distinctive brand of bipartisanship and maturity to move forward. As such, we wish McCain Godspeed and look for his signature fighting spirit to once again marshal the requisite will and strength to conquer this latest adversity to cross his path.

A sexy Jane Austen?

By PAULA MARANTZ COHEN
The Philadelphia Inquirer

Jane Austen, the beloved Regency novelist, died 200 years ago on July 18. Given the state of the contemporary publishing industry in this era of celebrity, I can only imagine what it would be like if Austen were writing today:

Best-selling author Jane Austen is reported to be engaged in a bidding war for a three-book contract. Record sums are expected.

"Two hundred years is a long time to be in print," commented one industry expert. "Editors want assurance of that kind of longevity when they sign book contracts these days."

Austen, who has penned six novels in the so-called chick-lit genre, is acclaimed for creating compelling romantic plots without resorting to sexually explicit material. Her works have been positively cited by such groups as the Mothers Affirming Modesty Association (MAMA).

The three books under negotiation are said to depart from Austen's trademark style. According to Cassie Austen, spokeswoman for her sister, "Jane is tired of being the spinster aunt of romantic fiction."

Austen herself, in a recent appearance on "The View," told Whoopi Goldberg: "It may surprise you to know that I've had sex, I like sex, and I think sex is fun."

Goldberg responded enthusiastically, but Joy Behar expressed the hope that Austen would remain true to her previous, tasteful plots. "It's nice to leave something to the imagination," said Behar, "though I know I'm showing my age."

Cassie Austen explained: "I trust that my sister will find a narrative framework that will allow her to address material heretofore unexplored."

NEW GROUND

The three books under discussion include two novels that would capitalize on the Austen brand while breaking new ground. Among titles rumored to be under consideration are: "Prose and Prostitution" – about two sisters, one getting a Ph.D. in literature and the other paying the bills by working as a lady of the night; and "Domination" – a sequel to "Persuasion" – that follows heroine Anne Elliot as she attains fulfillment through kinky sex with her husband, Capt. Frederick Wentworth.

Cassie Austen has hinted that a lingerie line, designed by Jane herself ("elegantly steamy," according to industry insiders) will be in the stores in advance of publication.

The third and most anticipated book will be a memoir, tentatively titled: "Tempest in a Teapot: Jane Austen Tells All."

The book will feature surprising events in Austen's seemingly uneventful life. Some of the highlights to be addressed include:

The secrets of multitasking: How to write six literary masterpieces while crocheting, serving tea and engaging in inane conversation.

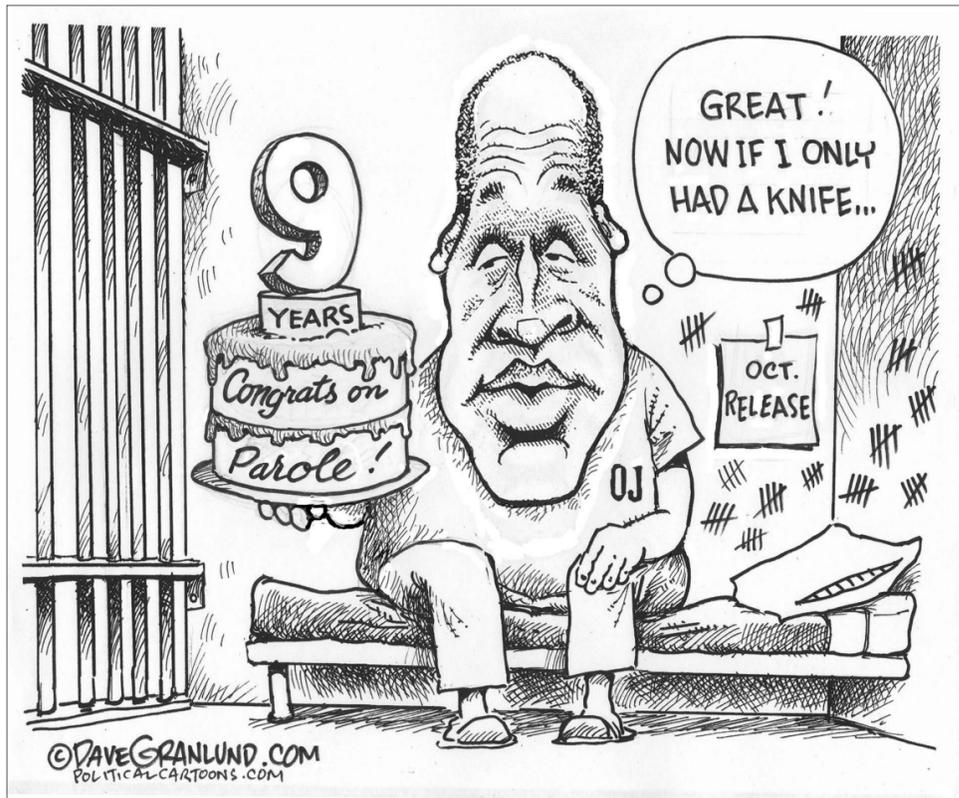

A who's who for the novels: Discover the real nincompoop behind Mr. Collins; the annoying cad who inspired Frank Churchill; the bitch who was the model for Mary Crawford.

The conundrum of the portrait: Was malice or lack of talent behind Cassandra's portrayal of her sister – because we all know that Jane Austen looks exactly like Keira Knightley?

Bloopers: The time a gentleman accidentally-on-purpose snatched the lace from the front of Jane's gown, requiring that her brother quickly give her a hanky to cover up.

And one final, great reveal: What really happened during that undocumented stretch in Bath? Hint from Cassie Austen: "Thank God for high-waisted Empire gowns and our relatives in France."

Action necessary to fix Medicaid so spending growth is restrained

By DAN WHITE

The Philadelphia Inquirer

Over the past few weeks, much of the country seems finally to have woken up to the reality that we are on a highly unsustainable fiscal path. One of the key drivers of that unsustainability, at both the federal and state levels, is Medicaid.

Much has been written on this subject in response to the health-care bill winding its way through the Senate, and at this point it can be easy to conflate opinion with reality. Here are three of the most important facts about Medicaid.

First and foremost, the program is incredibly important. Just over 70 million Americans get their health insurance through Medicaid. Many of those people are on the extreme lower end of the income distribution, and the program's existence has saved countless lives since its inception in the mid-1960s.

Second, insuring that many people isn't cheap. The program will cost roughly $600 billion this year, around $8,500 per Medicaid recipient.

Third, and of most interest lately, the program's costs are growing much faster than the revenue used to pay for them.

MEDICAID COSTS

This is projected to continue. According to the last actuarial report from the Obama administration, Medicaid costs will grow an average of more than 6 percent per year over the next decade. Meanwhile, nominal personal income, the collective pool of income out of which all of us pay our taxes, will grow just over 4 percent per year.

This means that every year, there will be a roughly 2 percentage-point growth mismatch in the amount of money we need to spend on Medicaid and the amount of money we will collect to pay for it. This funding gap is not new; it has persisted ever since the program was first instituted, and has resulted in Medicaid taking up a larger and larger portion of overall government spending.

At the federal level, this is relatively simple to deal with. We issue more Treasury bonds and run up the national debt to pay for the mismatch. At the state level, things get a bit more complicated. States must have balanced budgets, and as such are a zero-sum game. Every additional dollar they have to spend on Medicaid is a dollar that cannot be spent on other things like education, public safety or infrastructure.

Thus, as Medicaid has grown from about 9 percent of state budgets in the mid-1980s to almost 20 percent today, other spending programs have shrunk in proportion. The next time you get upset because you see funding for things like public universities or K-12 schools decline as a share of the budget, you'll know why. In response, one of the most simplistic and commonly proposed solutions to this problem is to raise taxes.

Raising taxes is the right solution when a level shift in funding is required, for example when adding a new program to the budget. But Pennsylvania and other states don't have a level problem; they have a growth problem.

TAX BURDEN

Raising taxes in this instance would only give us more rope to hang ourselves with. Because spending would still accelerate faster than revenue, in short order we would be right back to where we started, only with a greater tax burden on the economy.

The Medicaid debate shines a harsh spotlight on Pennsylvania. For one thing, we spend more on Medicaid than almost any other state as a percentage of our budget – Medicaid made up 29 percent of the commonwealth's general fund budget last year compared to 12 percent in New Jersey. For another, Pennsylvania's senior senator, Pat Toomey, is one of the lawmakers pushing hardest for reform.

One of the biggest points of contention in the Senate health-care bill is Toomey's proposal to cap Medicaid growth at the rate of inflation. In a strict sense this would not be a cut to Medicaid, in that Medicaid spending is not declining from one year to the next. Rather, the measure would force the program, at the federal level, to grow much more slowly than it otherwise would.

This provision of the bill holds monumental implications for Medicaid as well as the federal and state budgets. The only problem is that reasonable people can disagree vehemently about whether those implications are good or bad.

At the heart of the matter is whether or not you can slow the pace of health-care cost growth by turning down the amount of government money you pour into health care. Medicaid has continuously grown faster than the economy, not because of increases in the number of people enrolled, but because of increases in the cost per enrollee.

Sound theory suggests that this is at least in part because the government is required by law to pay into the system as much as is necessary to cover a recipient's health-care costs, and this gives little incentive for the system to keep costs low.

CONSERVATIVE ECONOMISTS

This is a core tenet of many conservative economists' work, but it is a concept also recognized by many left of center as well. In theory, then, capping the pace at which Medicaid spending can increase from one year to the next should eventually reduce the rate at which underlying health-care costs grow, which again is a fiscal necessity for both the federal and state governments.

The problem is what happens if this approach does not work, or does not work quickly. The federal government would be better off fiscally and protected from risk because of the cap. State governments are the ones essentially operating without a net under this scenario.

If underlying costs don't fall in line with the capped growth in federal spending, states will have to make up the difference. Thus so much of the consequences of this proposed policy ultimately depend on how states handle the reforms. Their reaction would be limited to two options: Limit the number of Medicaid enrollees, or find ways to limit growth in cost per enrollee. Neither would be an easy lift.

The only thing that is clear in this debate is that we are beyond the point of questioning whether or not action is necessary. The only question now is what action to take.

Continuation of the status quo is not an option.

In isolation, capping federal Medicaid growth is obviously risky. As an economist, I can come up with well-reasoned arguments both for and against it. In the context of the unsustainability of overall U.S. fiscal policy today, however, it might be worth the risk.

CLEVELAND

Kyrie Irving wants the stage for himself.

Cleveland's All-Star point guard has asked the Cavaliers to trade him, two people familiar with the situation told the Associated Press on Friday. Irving made the request last week to owner Dan Gilbert, said the people who spoke on condition of anonymity because the team is not commenting on the star's demands.

The Cavs are promoting assistant GM Koby Altman to be full-time GM, a person familiar with the decision said Friday.

Irving's appeal was first reported by ESPN.

A four-time All-Star, Irving has spent six seasons with the Cavs, who selected him with the No. 1 overall pick in 2011. The 25-year-old has overcome injury issues and blossomed into one of the league's elite point guards and biggest stars.

And now that he's finally established himself playing alongside LeBron James, Irving wants out.

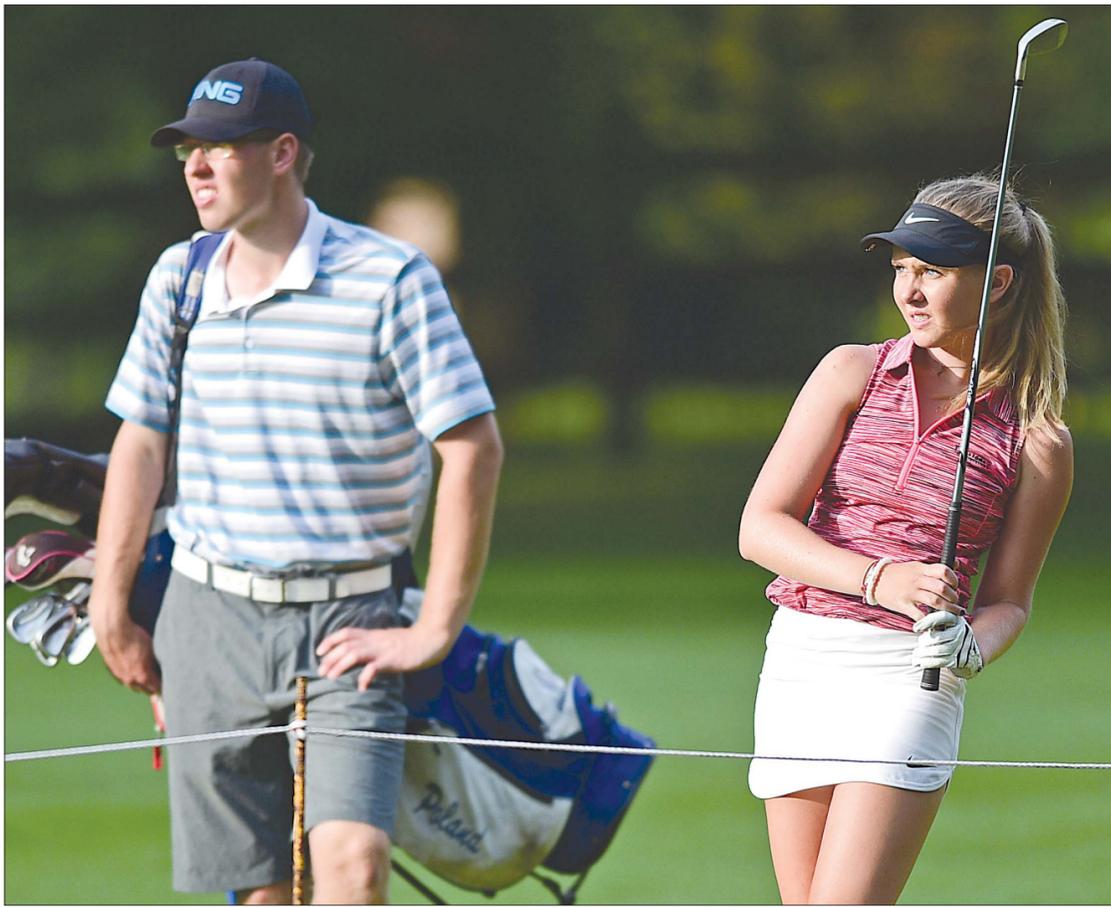

He's under contract for two more seasons with Cleveland (he has a player option in 2020), but the Cavs could be inclined to move Irving now and begin another rebuild around James, who can opt out of his contract next summer and leave Ohio for the second time.

The bombshell about Irving adds to what has been a tumultuous offseason for the Cavs following their loss in five games to Golden State in the NBA Finals. General manager David Griffin parted ways with the club after failing to work out a new contract with Gilbert and while other teams have been active in signing free agents the Cavs have been limited in their ability to revamp their roster because of salary-cap issues.

Spartan cousins Terlesky, Vivo have Greatest Golfer leads

One leader hangs on after faltering late. Another has an iron grip.

Terlesky

Vivo

That's where things stand for Boardman cousins Brian Terlesky and Jenna Vivo, who lead their 17-U competitors after the first day of the Greatest Golfer of the Valley Junior finals at Squaw Creek-Avalon Golf and Country Club.

The boys competition is far from decided, with Terlesky leading fellow Spartans Bryan Kordupel and Cole Christman by just one stroke. Warren JFK's Jimmy Graham and Brandon Cioffi of Hickory (Pa.) are two strokes off the lead. Vivo leads the pack by 10 strokes.

"I think the heat got to us a little bit. I was tired out there and I usually don't do that," Terlesky said. "I just think the back nine is harder in general, though I think I was just tired."

Terlesky and Christman started well on the front nine, shooting 1-under par and even, respectively. They remained neck-and-neck and held a minimum two-stroke lead on their playing partners until the final few holes.

THE OPEN Weather not an issue for Spieth in Round 2

Texan's short game flawless

Associated Press

SOUTHPORT, ENGLAND
Jordan Spieth expected a rough time at the British Open before he even got to the golf course.

He spent Friday morning at his rented house in front of the television, watching players battle a relentless wind at Royal Birkdale, all the while checking a forecast that was even worse for when he played in the afternoon.

"It wasn't a great feeling knowing we were coming into something harder than what we were watching," he said.

Spieth did more than just survive.

With a short game as sharp as it has been all year, and a 3-wood that turned out a lot better than it looked and led to an eagle, Spieth seized control with a 1-under 69 that gave him a two-shot lead over Matt Kuchar going into the weekend.

Spieth turned a bogey or worse into an unlikely par by chipping in from just short of the 10th green. And he learned enough from watching TV to know that going a little long on the par-5 15th would give him a better birdie chance than playing short. So he switched from a 3-iron to a 3-wood, hit it a little off the neck and watched it run hot and fast some 100 yards along the wet turf to about 18 feet away.

"I mishit the shot, which is probably why it looked so gross," Spieth said. "I hit it low off the heel, which is easy to do when you're trying to carve a cut. And it just ... one hop, scooted around the group of bunkers there, and then it was obviously fortunate to get all the way to the green."

The flight of that 3-wood looked as ugly as the

Astro loses NABF opener

Release Baseball holds defending champs hitless through four innings

By GREG GULAS

STRUTHERS

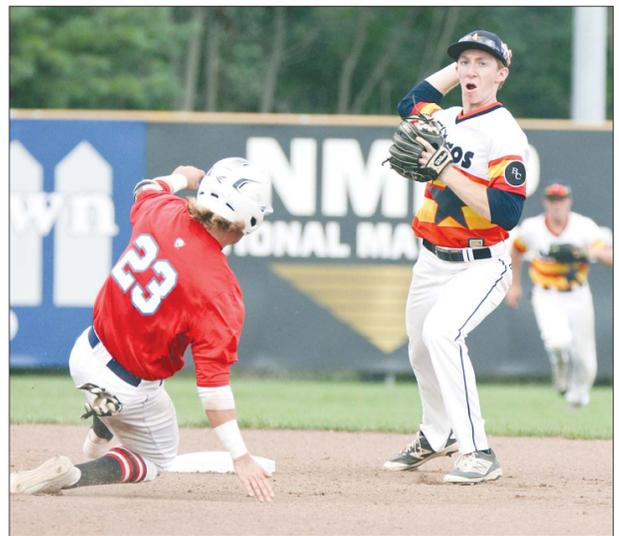

When Astro Falcons won the NABF senior division World Series championship last year, they had to do so by winning six straight games after an opening round, pool-play loss to Maryland Crab University, a team that they would eventually defeat for the title.

If they expect to repeat as champions this year, they'll have to do the exact same thing.

Nick Smith went the distance, scattering four hits while Nate Birtley had two hits and scored a run to lead Release Baseball to a 3-1 victory over Astros on Friday at Cene Park.

It has become an all too familiar scenario for Astro

Scappers rally in the ninth inning

AUBURN, NY Despite four Auburn Double-days' errors, the Mahoning Valley Scappers had to rally for a run in the top of the ninth inning to pick up their seventh straight win over Auburn, 5-4 on Friday night at Falcon Park.

Mahoning Valley started the game by getting the first two runners on base on back to back errors by the Doubledays. Following the two errors, a passed ball would allow Austen Wade to score for the early 1-0 lead. The Scappers would add on three runs thanks to two more Auburn errors in the top of the fifth inning. After Hosea Nelson doubled to start the inning, Ernie Clement singled to drive him in. Wade then lined out to pitcher Matt DeRosier with Clement at first. DeRosier tried to get the double play at first but threw the ball up the right field line to allow Clement to go from first to third. Two batters later, Nolan Jones singled to drive in Clement. Samad Taylor would also score on another error by Omar Meregildo, his second of the game.

Local octogenarians earn bronze medal

NILES Two men from the Mahoning Valley won bronze medal status in the National Senior Games in Birmingham, Ala. this past June.

Art See, 87, and Clyde Bollinger, 85, competed as a tennis doubles team. The pair will compete in the Northeast Ohio Senior Olympics and Sports Classic in Warren on Thursday.

Bubon named head coach at Point Park

PITTSBURGH Gabe Bubon, a Warren Harding graduate, has been named the head men's basketball coach at Point Park. He was on previous head coach Bob Rager's staff for the past 13 years and served as interim head coach last season.

Bubon was the head coach of Point Park's mens and womens golf team since 2009, but stepped down from those duties to focus on basketball. Bubon went 8-20 as interim coach.

Boasson Hagen wins Tour de France stage

SALON-DE-PROVENCE, FRANCE After two second-place finishes, Edvald Boasson Hagen finally got a stage victory at this Tour de France. Chris Froome and the other top riders took it easy, saving themselves for their last big fight this weekend.

Boasson Hagen, from Norway, caught the right breakaways on the longest stage and used all of his guile and strength to hold off chasers in the final section on Friday.

Boasson Hagen was part of a 20-man group that Froome and Team Sky gave freedom to escape from the peloton because none of them presented a threat to his overall lead. After two energy-sapping days of climbs in the Alps, Froome and his rivals had their sights set instead on the time trial on Saturday in Marseille that will determine the podium order before the race ends in Paris on Sunday.

Bengals suspend Jones for one game

CINCINNATI Bengals cornerback Adam "Pacman" Jones has been suspended for the regular-season opening game after his role in an altercation at a downtown Cincinnati hotel earlier this year.

Jones pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge from the January incident, the latest in a history of off-the-field legal issues for the NFL veteran. The NFL says the suspension was for a violation of its personal conduct policy. Police said Jones kicked and used head-butting as he was arrested for allegedly assaulting a hotel employee.

Jones can appeal the suspension within three days. Otherwise, he will be eligible to return to the active roster on Sept. 11 following the Bengals' opener against the Baltimore Ravens. Jones may participate in all preseason practices and games.

Billups but couldn't get him to join their front office. Irving's request to be dealt perhaps sheds some light on the Cavs' recent pursuit of former league MVP Derrick Rose. The team has talked to Rose about a one-year contract in recent days, a source familiar with the negotiations told the AP on Thursday.

Rose was thought to be a potential backup, but now it appears he could be needed to start if the Cavs and Irving are indeed breaking up. There is certain to be major interest in Irving, who averaged a career-high 25.2 points and 5.8 assists in 72 games last season. Irving averaged 25.9 points in his third straight Finals, but he and James couldn't do enough to match the Warriors, who took back their crown after adding Kevin Durant last summer.

A potential trade partner for the Cavs could be the New York Knicks, who have been trying to unload Carmelo Anthony, a close friend of James. Irving is from New Jersey and would welcome a chance to go back to his home area. However, the Knicks may not have enough assets to intrigue the Cavs and there is a sizeable imbalance in contracts, so the Cavs would have to include other players in any potential deal.

It's strange that Irving would choose now to ask for a trade. After all, he has finally developed into a bona fide superstar following three tough seasons following James' departure to Miami in 2010. Irving had no help during those years and the Cavs were in a state of disarray before James came back in 2014.

In his second year alongside James, Irving made the biggest shot in franchise history, draining a 3-pointer in the closing moments of Game 7 to give the Cavs their first title — and the first for any Cleveland pro team since 1964.

By all accounts, Irving and James got along but there were times when they didn't quite see eye to eye. James was demanding of his younger teammates but he was always adamant that Irving would grow into a superior player. Following Cleveland's Game 5 loss in the Finals, Irving credited James for leading the way.

"He's freaking awesome," Irving said. "As a student of the game, it would be a disservice to myself if I didn't try to learn as much as possible while I'm playing with this guy. Every single day demanding more out of himself, demanding more out of us, the true testament of a consummate professional. And understanding how things work, not only just in the game but off the court, things that matter, just taking care of your body, understanding the magnitude of what the goal is at hand and what steps it takes in order to achieve that goal."

Moments earlier, James had walked off the court at Oracle Arena where Irving was waiting. They made their signature handshake and James told Irving, "We'll be back." Now, they may be headed in opposite directions.

CAVS TO PROMOTE ALTMAN TO GM

A person familiar with the decision says the Cavaliers are promoting assistant general manager Koby Altman to be their full-time GM. Altman has been serving as the club's interim GM for the past few weeks. His deal is being finalized and will be announced in the next few days, said the person who spoke Friday to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because of the sensitive nature of the talks.

Altman has been with the Cavs since 2012 and had worked as David Griffin's assistant since after the 2016 title season. Griffin left the club last month after he couldn't work out a contract extension with owner Dan Gilbert. The 34-year-old Altman will be one of the league's youngest executives.

Matt Luke tries to pull together shattered Ole Miss program

Associated Press The task of pulling together Mississippi's shattered football program is now in the hands of interim coach Matt Luke.

The 40-year-old was promoted from co-offensive coordinator on Thursday night in the stunning aftermath of coach Hugh Freeze's resignation for a "pattern of personal misconduct" that started with the school's investigation into a call to an escort service. It's just the latest issue facing the embattled Rebels. While Luke has been an assistant at Ole Miss during Freeze's entire five-plus year tenure, his name has not been linked to the ongoing NCAA investigation of the program. Luke also has deep family ties to the university and north Mississippi, playing offensive line for the Rebels from 1995-98. Now he has a 12-game audition for the full-time job. It's not an ideal situation, but it's not completely bleak either. "Matt is a great coach," Bjork said when announcing Thursday the school was turning the program over to Luke. "He's a leader. He's a rock. He's an Ole Miss Rebel. And I'm confident — and especially even more confident after watching him address the team — that he will lead this team and program through this difficult time." Bjork also noted that Wesley McGriff, the team's defensive coordinator, has been promoted to associate head coach. Luke was not immediately available for interviews in the aftermath of Freeze's resignation. Luke is now in charge of a program that still has a talented roster — especially on offense — but is in the midst of long-running NCAA in-

The pair was two-over par heading into the 17th hole. Christman shanked his second shot out of bounds — necessitating a dropped ball — and then needed three putts to finish with a seven on a par 5.

“I was hitting the ball pretty well today. My driver was straight and my irons were good — I just couldn’t putt,” Christman said. “I three-putt way too many times.”

To him, that wasn’t his worst hole. It was No. 7, where he reached the green on a par-4 from the tee, but finished even for the hole.

“That one should have been a birdie,” Christman said.

Terlesky bogeyed No. 17 and No. 18 to finish 3-over par at 75.

Vivo was 4-over par on the front nine, but turned things around in an impressive fashion. She came out of the turn with a birdie-par-birdie combo, then shot even on every hole save No. 17 the rest of the way. That was another birdie.

“I knew I had to do something on the back to make sure I was in this tournament,” Vivo said.

As the only girls golfer to shoot under 80 with a 74, Vivo is not only alive in the tournament, but a heavy favorite to lift the trophy at Avalon Golf and Country Club. With Terlesky, Kordupel and Christman in the mix for a title, she likes the chances for Spartan sweep for Greatest Golfer.

“We have a pretty good golf team on both sides at Boardman,” Vivo said. “We like playing together, practicing together and we’re always pushing each other.”

Boardman’s Brittney Jonda and Poland’s Jenna Jacobson were tied for the second best score at 84.

Kordupel was one stroke better than what he scored when he won the Squaw Creek qualifier back in May.

“I think I hit the ball a little better than, but my putting is night and day compared to that day,” Kordupel said. “The greens were definitely faster compared to last time, but I definitely thought today was better over all.”

Graham put in what was maybe

Kate Brown of Hickory High School, left, pumps her fist after sinking her putt for a par on No. 15, while Cardinal Mooney’s Keegan Butler reacts to missing his on No. 16 in Round 1 of The Vindicator’s Greatest Golfer of the Valley Junior finals Friday at Squaw Creek-Avalon Golf and Country Club in Vienna. The pair competed in 17-U divisional play, which will conclude today along with 14-U competition at Avalon Lakes in Howland.

DAVID DERMER | THE VINDICATOR

the best bogey of the tournament on No. 14. That hole featured a shot out of bounds and a ball being punched out from behind a tree. He got a six on the par 5, but for what he faced, it was a good salvage job.

He heads to his home course — Avalon Golf and Country Club in Howland — for the final day.

“I’ve played some really good practice rounds so I know I can get the job done,” Graham said. “I just need to stay focused and keep my head in the game.”

The finals tee off at 12:30 p.m. The 14-U finals are at 1:50 p.m., also at Avalon.

Spieth was at 6-under 134. It was the 12th time he has been atop the leaderboard at a major, including the fourth rounds of the Masters and U.S. Open that he won in 2015. Spieth is the sole leader at a major for the first time

Encarnacion homers; Tribe wins in a rout

CLEVELAND

The Toronto Blue Jays know better than any team in baseball what happens when Edwin Encarnacion gets hot.

Encarnacion homered and drove in four runs against his former team as the Cleveland Indians routed Toronto 13-3 on Friday night.

“Yeah, many a time, thanks for reminding me,” Blue Jays manager John Gibbons joked when asked about seeing similar performances when the slugger played six seasons with Toronto.

Encarnacion, who signed a three-year, $60 million contract with Cleveland in January, hit a leadoff home run in the second, broke a 3-all tie in the fifth with a two-run double and added an RBI single when Cleveland scored eight times in the seventh.

“I always try to give my best no matter who we’re playing,” he said. “Thankfully, I was able to have a good game against my ex-team.”

Encarnacion was 3 for 4 with a walk and nearly added to his total later in the seventh, but center fielder Kevin Pillar tracked down his fly ball on the warning track with two runners on.

Encarnacion’s big night couldn’t have come at a better time. The Indians won for just the second time in eight games and the offense scored 16 runs during a 1-5 road trip.

“He picked us up,” manager Terry Francona said. “Once he did, sometimes the hitting can get contagious. Tonight was one of those nights. It was good.”

Abraham Almonte hit a three-run homer and rookie Bradley Zimmer added a two-run single in the seventh.

Trevor Bauer (8-8) allowed three runs in five innings. The right-hander lasted only 2/3 of an inning — matching the shortest start of his career — against Oakland on Sunday.

Marco Estrada (4-7) gave up five runs in 4 2/3 innings and hasn’t won since May 27.

Jose Morales, Ryan Goins and Justin Smoak drove in runs for Toronto, which took a 3-1 lead into the fifth before Cleveland scored four times.

Almonte led off with a triple and Roberto Perez walked. Erik Gonzalez’s single cut the lead to 3-2 and Francisco Lindor drew a one-out walk to load the bases. Michael Brantley’s RBI fielder’s choice tied the game.

Brantley stole second and Encarnacion lined a 3-2 pitch to the gap in left-center giving Cleveland the lead.

“We’re playing from a deficit and so many times that’s been really difficult for us,” Francona said. “Not only did we come back, but then we spread it out. That’s a good way to play.”

Encarnacion has hit 20 home runs in six consecutive seasons.

Canfield 11-12s need two victories

By RICK CASSANO
Special to the Vindicator

MAUMEE

It's Canfield against Hamilton West Side for the title in the double-elimination tournament, with Hamilton winning their first matchup 5-4 on Thursday. Saturday's finals are scheduled to begin at 10:30 a.m. at Ford Park's Robert S. Hoag Field, and a second game will follow if Canfield wins the opener. The Ohio champion will earn a trip to the Great Lakes Regional.

Canfield, a 15-0, five-inning winner over Dover in Friday's losers' bracket final, knows a few things about coming out of the losers' bracket to become champions. This group did exactly that as 10s and 11s.

"They're 12. Anything can happen," Canfield coach George Beck said. "We've proven that we can do it the last two years against Olentangy and Dover, so I don't see any reason why we can't do it again. Hamilton is a formidable foe without question, but so was Olentangy and so was Dover. We have confidence in our kids."

TODAY

◆ Canfield vs. Hamilton West Side, 10:30 a.m. at Ford Park's Robert S. Hoag Field in Maumee

West Side completed an unbeaten run through last year's 12-year-old state tournament by burying Canfield 11-0. Ace pitcher Braedyn Moore played up on that Hamilton squad.

"We're in a better position," said Hamilton coach Ken Coomer, who won't have Moore available to throw because of pitch-count rules. "It doesn't mean it's 100 percent, but they've still got to beat us twice."

"We'll have a bunch of kids available to throw, and we're confident with us hitting the ball. We know we can hit. We just need to come through a little bit more than we did the last game. We can't have 11 strikeouts again."

Saturday's finals are scheduled to begin at 10:30 a.m. at Ford Park's Robert S. Hoag Field, and a second game will follow if Canfield wins the opener. The Ohio champion will earn a trip to the Great Lakes Regional.

Moore is the only West Side pitcher who won't be able to pitch Saturday. Lake Cundiff is slated to get the first start, though Coomer said that could change as well.

Hamilton is seeking its 17th 12-year-old state championship and 10th in the last 12 years. Canfield won titles in 1998, 2000 and 2014.

Canfield has two pitchers that won't be able to throw Saturday: Ben Slanker, one of its top hurlers, and Broc Lowry, who's pitched very little this year. Slanker allowed three runs in 4.2 innings of relief work against Hamilton on Thursday.

The West Side coaches pointed to A.J. Havrilla, a hard-throwing righty, as Canfield's ace — he struck out the only Hamilton batter he faced Thursday. Beck smiled when he was asked about who his starting pitcher will be.

"That's the million-dollar question," he said. "Honestly, we don't know yet. We have a slew of pitchers available. A.J. has been closing for us all year, but we've got to win Game 1 to get to Game 2."

"We like using A.J. as a closer because he's a big boy on the mound who throws hard and has a nice breaking ball," Coomer said. Now whether we'll use him in that role (Saturday), I don't know yet. We'll go back and talk and see if we want to throw him in a starting role or if we'll try to use him on the back end."

Falcons manager Andy Timko, who would rather his team start tournament play just as strong as it finishes.

The game marked the second time this week — the other time was on Monday during the Class B championship — that Astro Falcons failed to produce a hit until the fifth inning of action.

"We crushed the ball on Monday against a pitcher going to the University of North Carolina and today were shut down as well, but we're an excellent hitting team and it just comes down to playing the game between the lines," Timko said. "It's the same scenario as last year in that we lost our first game and then had to win six in a row to win it all."

"We'll need to win three in a row, however, in order to get out of pool play and then move on from there."

Release Baseball (2-0, a 9-1 winner over Troy American Legion in their opening game on Thursday) took a 2-0 lead in the second inning when Quinn Lavelle's single plated Chad Szydlowski with the first run of the game, doubling their lead a batter later after Birtley scored on Austin Levan's ground out.

Birtley's double earlier in the frame was Release Baseball's first hit of the game.

Release Baseball threatened to add to their lead in the fourth inning after Szydlowski and Birtley led off the frame with singles.

Timko then replaced starter Dom Mi-

Laster settled in though, as he got Lavelle to fly-out and proceeded to strike out both Levan and Luke Razzante to end the inning.

In the fifth inning, Astro Falcons cut the deficit in half when Craig Palidon sent Vinny Mastrangelo across the plate with his infield single.

"We need to stay aggressive and maintain our charisma in the dugout. Everyone needs to pick everyone else up," Mastrangelo said. "It's all about team leadership and being able to assist your teammate. When one is down, someone has to step up and pick-up the slack."

Release Baseball added an insurance marker in the seventh inning when Eric Wentz's single up the middle plated Levan

PRAYER OF SUPPLICATION TO THE HOLY SPIRIT
"Holy Spirit, You who solve all problems, who light all roads so that I can attain my goal. You who give me the divine gift to forgive and to forget, all evil against me and that in all instances of my life You are with me. I want this short prayer to thank You for all things and to confirm once again that I never want to be separated from You, even and in spite of all material allusions. I wish to be with You in Eternal Glory. Thank You for your mercy towards me and mine." The person must say this prayer for three consecutive days. After three days the favor will be granted even if it may appear difficult. This prayer must be published immediately after the favor is granted without mentioning the favor, only your initials should appear at the bottom.TAP

Part of the mystique of fishing

I think it is cool that we cannot see what lurks under the water.

Sure, we have sonar to help us read what's in the depths under our boats. And yes, we have polarized sunglasses to help us discern objects obscured by the glare off the water.

But for the most part, we still can't see well enough to know for certain that a fish is finning under the spot where we just tossed our lures.

To me, that's one of the great things about fishing. The mystery of the underwater environment and the creatures that live there is part of the mystique of fishing. If I knew for certain a bass was hunkered next to that stump in 4 feet of water, little would be left to imagine.

And so it was last weekend when I visited Pymatuning Reservoir. The big lake straddles the state line like the saddle on the back of a horse. It sprawls into the marshes in Ashtabula and Crawford counties and much of its shoreline is littered with trees that have toppled into the water.

The fallen timber provides perfect shallow-water cover for largemouth bass. And since one of my favorite ways to fish is to poke and prod in gnarly cover, I am attracted to certain Pymatuning shorelines like a bear is attracted to honeycombs.

Conditions were perfect for Pymatuning flipping. The sun was bright and the wind was brisk but not overpowering. As I worked the boat through the cover, I pitching baits neatly into the shadows created by crisscross logs, stumps and up-turned root systems.

Line-busting tangles of twigs, trunks and roots provide escape channels for hard-charging largemouths. Give a bass half a chance and it'll snap your line.

Flipping is big-tackle fishing. I use 7.5-foot heavy-action sticks with fast tips and high-speed baitcasting reels spooled with 20-pound-test fluorocarbon line.

One might think this is overkill for a fish that usually weighs less than 2 pounds and is rarely over 5 in this part of the country. But bass anglers share countless tales of snapped lines and broken hearts when flipping the heavy cover.

This was the environment I was fishing at Pymatuning. The water was snaggy and a bit murky, to the point where I couldn't see much more than 6 inches under the surface. And it was producing quite nicely.

By midmorning I'd boated a dozen feisty bass. Most were around 16 inches, nice solid 2-pounders that provided great sport. Several topped 3 pounds and bulldogged stubbornly in the thick cover. One was a rock-solid 5-pounder that fortunately fought clear of the nasty cover so I could eventually work it to the side of the boat.

As the clock ticked toward my noon quit time, I pitched my soft plastic creature bait along the shady flank of a long lay-down. As I swam the lure back toward the boat, the line darted to the left. I jerked, but the hook failed to find the fish's jaw.

I threaded a fresh lure and repeated the pitch and retrieve.

Again the line jumped and I struck fish flesh. This time, however, I gained nothing as I tried to pull the fish toward open water. It was like I'd hooked a rhino. Before I could calculate a better angle, the fish wrapped the line around something under the water.

This fish had won. I would gain a foot, but then the fish would take it all back. Whatever was down there had created a stalemate. Eventually the line had to be broken.

My first thought was that I wish I knew what manner of monster I'd hooked. But in hindsight, it's kind of cool to still be uncertain.

So now it can be whatever I want it to be. And that's part of the mystique of fishing.

Is it praying or preying mantis?

The first time I saw a praying mantis my dad explained that it ate lots of insect pests so I should never kill one. I suspect that everyone has learned that lesson as a child. Measuring up to 4 inches long, mantises are hard to miss. And because they are such beneficial insects, they get a lot of attention.

Most of the hundreds of known species of mantises live in the tropics, but two are fairly common in the eastern U.S. The larger Chinese mantis is more common in the upper Midwest and Northeast. This is the one most of us recognize. The smaller Carolina mantis is found throughout the Southeast and measures less than 3 inches long.

In addition to their size, mantids can be identified by their large eyes, swivel head and greatly enlarged spiny front legs, which are folded as if in prayer. A better name for these insects, however, is preying mantis because they use their front legs to grab and hold any unsuspecting victim that wanders by too closely. When a mantis strikes, the movement is too fast to be perceived with the naked eye.

Thanks to their size and hunting skills, mantids eat just about anything they can grab — beetles, true bugs, grasshoppers, bees, butterflies and moths. A curious aspect of mantid breeding behavior is that immediately after mating the female usually turns her head, reaches over her shoulder, grabs the male's head, and eats it. It's certainly an effective way to ensure a mate's fidelity.

I've always been fascinated by mantids' ferocious predatory behavior and wondered if they ever take larger prey. Accounts of mantids taking small birds are relatively common, and they are also known to take small tree frogs, lizards and mice. Over the years, I've even received several photos from readers depicting large mantids perched menacingly on nectar feeders waiting for hummingbirds.

So I was intrigued recently when I received an email alert about a paper in The Wilson Journal of Ornithology titled "Bird Predation by Praying Mantises: A Global Perspective." It reviews 147 incidents of small birds being captured by 12 species of mantids. The reports come from 13 countries on all continents except Antarctica.

Most reports (70 percent) came from the U.S. where mantids are often seen hunting in gardens, at nectar feeders, and at hummingbird-pollinated plants. The ruby-throated hummingbird, just like the one in your backyard, was the species most frequently victimized by mantids. Hummingbirds were also attacked by mantids in Canada, Central America and South America. And in Africa, Asia, Australia and Europe researchers also found records of 29 small songbirds captured by mantids. In the U.S. two songbirds were attacked by mantids — a northern parula warbler and a blue-headed vireo.

Of all the birds captured by mantids, 78 percent were killed and eaten, 2 percent escaped on their own, and humans rescued 18 percent. Most of those freed by humans were tangled in mist nets set up to capture birds at banding stations where banders are ever vigilant for such dangers.

Several reasons account for the disproportionate number of hummingbird victims coming from the U.S. First, North America is home to many of the world's smallest birds (hummingbirds), which can be overpowered by large mantids. Second, the popularity of using nectar feeders and planting nectar-bearing plants to attract hummingbirds to backyards has skyrocketed over the last 30 years. And third, large mantids released across the landscape for biological control of insect pests have become established and relatively abundant to the point that they could be considered legitimate threats to hummingbirds.

Finally, for the sake of completeness, mantids are not the only invertebrate to kill and eat hummingbirds and small songbirds. Large orb-weaving spiders also take their fair share.

Expect reports of hummingbird predation by mantids to increase in the coming years. The ease of posting photos on social media makes this almost a certainty.

Next time you purchase mantid egg cases to control backyard insect pests, consider the unintended consequences.

Dr. Shalaway can be heard on Birds & Nature from 3 to 4 p.m. Sundays on 620 KHB Radio, Pittsburgh, or live online anywhere at www.khbradio.com. Visit Scott's website www.drshalaway.com or contact him directly at sshalaway@aol.com or 2222 Fish Ridge Road, Cameron, WV 26033.

Dear Annie

Conflict with sister has grown

Dear Annie: My conflicts with my sister, "Amy," began when she crossed boundaries in an incident between our adult children. My daughter, "Leslie," decided that she no longer wanted to live in an apartment she shared with Amy's daughter. Amy's daughter, in turn, chastised Leslie and me, using vulgarity. Amy took her daughter's side and blamed us.

The conflicts then continued when it was time to settle our parents' estate. She refused to give me my inheritance. Her lawyer, who is a friend of hers, is biased and will not abide by the will, which says that all "should be fair and equitable." Nothing has been equitable for me. I left my job to care for my mother until her death. Amy did very little.

There are so many more problems between us. Amy is a narcissist. She has no respect for boundaries. She lashes out at others constantly. She talks poorly about everyone (family included) and passes judgment on everyone except her own children. She does nothing for others unless there is something in it for herself. She says, often and proudly, "I make other people do my dirty work."

She is toxic and has never apologized to me for anything, and I know she never will. She invites my family to her family events and pretends there is no problem. I have stayed clear of some family functions when she has been there. I have my own family events and have no desire to invite her or her adult children. (It is sad, but it is what it is.)

I have endured her bullying for years but can no longer do it without losing my self-respect. I remain conflicted about this but don't want to be drawn into her chaos. I am done with taking the high road. What do you think?

DISGUSTED

Dear Disgusted: I think the high road is a good place to be if you're trying to gain distance from your sister; her route seems considerably lower. Don't let her drag you into that gutter. If you're concerned about getting your inheritance, hire your own lawyer to advocate for you so you don't have to battle it out yourself. Keep her out of your life, and don't involve yourself with hers. Loving her from afar might be the only way for you to love her.

Dear Annie: This is in response to a recent column of yours that featured a letter about children misbehaving in television commercials. The letter writer, "Watching in Disbelief," was upset to see such behavior presented as cute or otherwise acceptable. Dear "Watching": Say something!

I saw some advertisements on TV recently that sent bad messages. One showed young kids passing a big rig on a two-lane rural road. The driver was wearing a seat belt, but his girlfriend wasn't. I called and complained, and now it's gone. If you see something, say something. But be nice when saying it.

TAKING ACTION

Dear Taking Action: Great points in your letter, especially that last one. We're always free to speak up, and it costs nothing to be polite when doing so.

Hope to garden? Try these hints

Dear Heloise: Gardening is a relaxing and fun hobby for me. I've come up with my favorite gardening hints:

- ♦ My spade and shovel get a quick spray of silicone lubricant – this allows the dirt to slide right off.
- ♦ A good way to add nutrients to the soil is with Epsom salts, which are made of magnesium and sulfate. A small amount (less than a tablespoon) mixed in the watering can will do the trick. (Don't use table salt.)
- ♦ Ask the neighborhood coffeehouse for some used coffee grounds. They nourish the soil, too – and usually are given away free!
- ♦ Plastic forks upright in the garden can deter critters.
- ♦ I can start seedlings in a cloth shoe rack with dirt in each pocket.
- ♦ I cut the arms off an old sweatshirt and wear the sleeves when I'm pruning the roses. The heavy material protects my arms from thorns.
- ♦ Compost is always in season: eggshells, veggie clippings, shredded newspaper and cotton fibers.

I hope your readers will find these hints useful!

Dear Heloise: I love to read. I read everything – newspapers and books, books for school and learning and history, and fun books about my favorite superheroes!

My parents even taught me to love poetry and biographies. Reading out loud is a fun family activity. We sometimes end up in stitches, but we learn a lot. We've replaced our TV time with family reading time. My sister and I have so much fun.

I recommend reading for everyone, especially over the summertime!

Dear Heloise: I find a multitier skirt hanger useful for hanging small seasonal flags. Each tier holds them by season, and there are no wrinkles or fold marks.

Dear Heloise: I love tuna salad, but not all the calories that mayonnaise adds. I mash a hard-boiled egg in a bowl and add a tablespoon of pickle relish and one can of drained tuna. The egg yolk and pickle juice blend together to make a nice, creamy dressing.

Another go-round for 'Last Chance U'

By RALPH D. RUSSO
AP College Football Writer

NEW YORK

The East Mississippi Community College Lions are back as the documentary series "Last Chance U" returns for a second season.

All eight episodes of season two are available on Netflix.

The first season of the documentary by director Greg Whiteley chronicled the ups and downs of the junior college football team's 2015 season and turned out to be a hit that reached well beyond hard-core sports fans and drew people to Scooba, Miss.

"When we were filming season two, every week there was somebody showing up, and frequently they were from overseas," Whiteleysaid in a phone interview with the AP on Thursday. "I remember there was this one couple from Scotland. They were on their honeymoon. There was another couple that came from Australia. These are people, they have Netflix accounts overseas, they watched the series and loved it. Didn't know anything about American football. Didn't care anything about American football, but just wanted to come to Scooba, Miss., and meet some of these people they fell in love with."

Junior college football teams are typically stocked with players talented enough to be playing in Division I, but because of issues away from the field — sometimes academics, sometimes behavior problems or legal issues — they end up in small towns hoping to redeem themselves. Rosters turn-over drastically from year to year so there are plenty of new faces at "Last Chance U" in season two.

Two of the biggest stars from the series are back.

Brittany Wagner returns as the pencil-pushing, strong-willed academic adviser who often stole the show, though 2016 turns out to be her last season with EMCC. Wagner left the school earlier this year to take a marketing job in Birmingham, Ala., and then started her own academic consulting firm called 10 Thousand Pencils.

Blustery coach Buddy Stephens is back and hoping for some redemption of his own, Whiteley said.

"He really felt as though, 'I didn't like what I saw in season one and I didn't like what I saw in me. I need to make some changes,'" Whiteley said about Stephens' receptiveness to another season of being followed by cameras.

Whiteley and his crew demand lots of unfettered access and time. He said East Mississippi was once again happy to accommodate.

Whiteley said he did not go into the project thinking it would produce more than one season, but the stories were simply too rich to let go.

"The season ended with a fight, and so we knew they were going to have to begin the next season with one arm tied behind their back in the first game. We thought that would be interesting," Whiteley said.

Jason Bateman directs and stars in 'Ozark'

Laura Linney and Jason Bateman in a scene from the series "Ozark."

Both sides of camera

By FRAZIER MOORE
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK

In his new drama series "Ozark," Jason Bateman doesn't aim to make waves as Chicago financial adviser Marty Byrde — more like ripples that leave no one around him untouched or unexposed.

When not advising clients on their 401(k) plans, Marty launders cash by the millions. But now he's jammed up with the South American drug cartel he cleans that money for. So he and his family bolt for the Missouri Ozarks, a safer base of operations where he hopes to make things right before the Byrdes end up dead.

The intoxicating saga that powers the 10 episodes of "Ozark" (just released on Netflix) is full of unexpected twists and is fortified by a splendid cast including Laura Linney as Marty's accomplice-wife and the mother of their two kids.

The drama churns around Marty, yet, for Bateman, this starring role was just his means to a more compelling end: the role of director.

At 48, Bateman began his acting career in childhood on "Little House on the Prairie" and "Silver Spoons," and is perhaps best known as a member of the flakey Bluth family on the cult comedy "Arrested Development." (Next month, he reunites with his fellow Bluth loonies to shoot a new cycle of the series for Netflix.)

But after decades on camera, Bateman found an even greater passion. He directed (not just acted in) a pair of features: "Bad Words" (2013) and "The Family Fang" (2015). He wanted more of that.

That's where "Ozark" came in. He signed on as its executive producer with plans to direct all 10 episodes. (This proved logistically impossible; he directed the four that bookend the season, passing the reins to others for the middle six.) His acting job was secondary. The chance to direct "was the draw," he says. "That's what got me vibrating."

A yearning to direct? What actor doesn't hear that siren call?

But what makes Bateman's case a bit different is his attitude toward acting, and how, in "Ozark," that less-is-more policy informs his performance.

Though slammed with one fearsome challenge after another, Marty responds in mostly microscopic ways. The audience can tell things eat at him, but it's mostly buried deep beneath the surface. Marty seems so disconnected from his feelings, the viewer is obliged to do the connecting for him, to fill in the blanks Bateman sketches out. The viewer is summoned to help Marty feel.

This is Bateman's kind of role. "The characters that I'm always drawn to play is 'us,'" he says — "as a proxy who shapes the experience for the audience."

Even in his signature role on "Arrested Development," his character, Michael Bluth, serves as the audience's surrogate — the sanest member of this clan who shares and shapes viewers' wonderment at the lunacy whirling around him.

"Acting changed for me a while ago when I started to become disenchanted with pretending to be other people," Bateman says. "I'm not interested in tricking you into thinking I'm somebody else. My challenge with acting has now changed into a different goal: to give me another hand on the wheel, along with directing, to steer the audience through the story."

It seems like heresy: The notion that an actor isn't always playing let's-pretend, and wouldn't want to claim the spotlight at every opportunity.

"I'm trying to not do ANY acting," Bateman insists. "I'm trying to be not distracting at all. I don't want to rock the boat. I don't want to do anything where the audience goes, 'Oh! Look at that performance!' I'm just trying to service the story. I'm trying to be as natural" — a long, contemplative pause — "and invisible as possible."

Or, put another way: "This ISN'T Daniel Day-Lewis work," he says with a smile.

RECORD REVIEWS

HALSEY

◆ Album: "Hopeless Fountain Kingdom"

◆ Grade: B

How the darkly intrepid electronic music chanteuse Ashley Nicolette Frangipane — the tangy toast of Washington, N.J. — got to be the nu-synth-soul diva Halsey is a matter of patience on her part, and the broadening of expectations from her longtime fan base and radio programmers. Like her brooding New Zealand counterpart Lorde, Halsey's sophomore effort lightens in sound, tone, and lyrical intent without allowing too much sunshine into her erstwhile ethos. In other words, if you liked her catty baritone on EDM superstars the Chainsmokers' smash hit "Closer," you'll freak for "fountain."

Yes, there's more glistening R&B-hop than on her "Badlands" debut of 2015 — the luxurious "Alone" or the raggedy "Lie," featuring Quavo of Migos — and a nod to softly strung, overly sensitive singer-songwriter stuff ("Sorry").

FOSTER THE PEOPLE

◆ Album: "Sacred Hearts Club"

◆ Grade: A-

It hasn't always been easy to be Foster the People. Making sophisticated pop with thoughtful lyrics in danceable, candy-coated hooks is like being a character actor trapped in a leading man's body. If that's the case, then Foster the People resemble Brad Pitt on their third studio album.

"Sacred Hearts Club" gets the delicate mix right, getting progressively more complex as you go through the album, delivering pure shimmering pop like "Pay the Man" and "Sit Next to Me" at the beginning, and ending with a glimpse of the LA-based band's ambition in such complex, thrilling songs as "Loyal Like Sid & Nancy" and "Harden the Paint."

Led by lead singer, guitarist and keyboardist Mark Foster, the band has undergone changes since it created hits such as "Pumped Up Kicks" and "Houdini." The trio is now a quartet, with multi-instrumentalist Isom Innis also helping produce.

On the 12-track "Sacred Hearts Club" — two cuts are interludes — Foster the People get help from "The Hunger Games" actress Jena Malone on the airy "Static Space Lover" and OneRepublic's Ryan Tedder on the catchy first single, "Doing It for the Money."

Making ambitious pop isn't easy but "Sacred Hearts Club" is way more musically consistent than Foster the People's last offering, the complex ultimately unsatisfying "Supermodel" in 2014. This time, the band pairs joyous melodies with thought-provoking content in ever-increasing complexity and lets you find your sweet spot. And you will find it.

The actor who was 'Mad' before he was a 'Zoo' keeper

By Jay Bobbin
© Zap2it

Q. Now that "Zoo" is back, I'm pretty sure I've seen the actor who plays Jackson on "Mad Men." Am I right? — Bob Shaw, via e-mail

A. You are. James Wolk had previously — including "Lone Star," which lasted two episodes before Fox canceled it, and the Robin Williams-Sarah Michelle Gellar CBS comedy "The Crazy Ones" — before he landed the role of ambitious, glad-handing 1960s ad-agency man Bob Benson (whose transparent behavior became sort of a popular cliché, though he had much more going on beneath the surface) on AMC's acclaimed "Mad Men."

Wolk was seen in only a dozen episodes of that show, but that was enough to fast-forward his career and land him the top-billed part of vicious-animal-fighter Jackson Oz on "Zoo," which now is in its third CBS season. He also appeared in a couple of episodes of Showtime's "Billions" earlier this year.

Q. I saw a production of "Death of a Salesman" with Dustin Hoffman on television recently. When was that done? — Jane March, Glen Burnie, Md.

A. It was recorded during mid-1980s Broadway revival of the Arthur Miller stage classic, and first shown on CBS in the late summer of 1985. Directed by the acclaimed filmmaker Volker Schlöndorff ("The Tin Drum"), it earned Emmys for Hoffman as title salesman Willy Loman and Johjn Malkovich as eldest son Biff. (It also won a third for its art direction.)

To play his role accurately, Hoffman had to "age" about 15 years ahead of his actual age at the time, which he achieved through a combination of mannerism and makeup. A very interesting part of his preparation was that for part of it, he rehearsed with the veteran actor who originated Loman on the stage, Lee J. Cobb.

Q. When will the new "American Idol" begin? — Donna Wade, Norman, Okla.

A. Though ABC hadn't announced a premiere date at the time of this writing, indications are that the network wants to start it coming out of its annual broadcast of the Oscars. Though the show's traditional launch had been in January when it was on Fox, then, it could be in March.

Q. Will "BattleBots" be returning to ABC this summer? — Pete Bush, Lady Lake, Fla.

A. No. After two seasons of that revival, the network decided to go in some different directions ... a couple of them including other revivals, namely "The Gong Show" and "Battle of the Network Stars." However, "BattleBots" does live on elsewhere, since its eighth season is running on the Discovery-owned network Science.

Q. On "The Man From U.N.C.L.E.," what did U.N.C.L.E. stand for? — Tom Lord, Providence, R.I.

A. As the story goes, nothing, originally. It was simply an acronym that the show's makers liked, and they were content to leave it a mystery — until the United Nations voiced some concern about potentially being mistaken for the "U.N." part, particularly given the general area of New York where the base of the show was, since that's where United Nations headquarters is located.

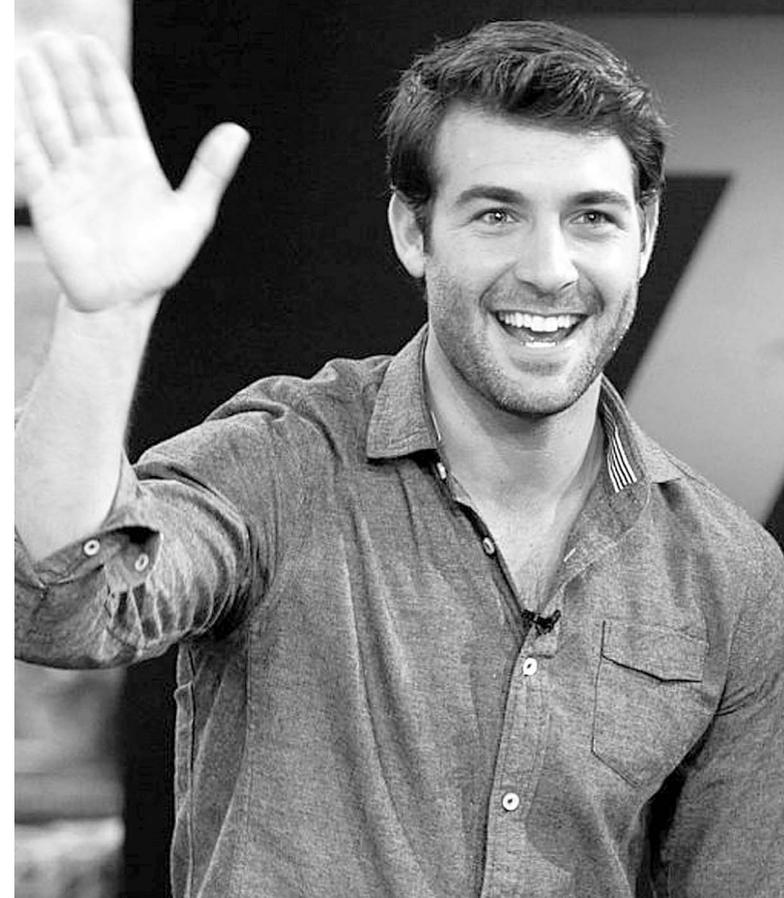

Thus, the phrase "United Network Command for Law and Enforcement" was born. The producers took it a step farther in the show's closing credits and thanked that organization "without whose assistance this program would not be possible," though it actually didn't exist.

Q. If "Doubt" wasn't a success for CBS, why is it back? — Danielle Prince, via e-mail

A. You'll often see that happen on summer Saturdays with series that didn't last through the entire run during the regular broadcast-television season. Admittedly, that's something of an understatement with "Doubt," which lasted for all of two weeks before CBS pulled it ... leaving a lot of episodes unseen.

The upside for the network is that it gets to make some use of its investment in the show by still running it, plus they have something fresh to show on usually repeat-heavy Saturdays. That's also been done in recent years with the comedies "Angel From Hell," "The Millers" and "The McCarthys."

'Midnight, Texas': Where the living and the dead intersect

Something evil is afoot in a small Texas backwater and a group of unusual locals is determined to put a stop to it in a new supernatural thriller series debuting this week on NBC.

In "Midnight, Texas," which premieres Monday, July 24, nothing is what it seems and abnormal is normal. In this place where the veil between the living and the dead is at its thinnest, those looking to hide from the outside world will find safe haven.

Into this remote burg comes Manfred (Francois Arnaud, "The Borgias"), a charming, powerful psychic with an ability to communicate with the dead. His presence raises the suspicions of assassin Olivia (Arielle Kebbel, "The Vampire Diaries"), mainly because no one comes to Midnight of their own volition.

Midnight is also home to Bobo (Dylan Bruce, "Orphan Black"), proprietor of the local pawn shop; Fiji (Parisa Fitz-Henley, "Luke Cage"), a witch and owner of the local wiccan shop; Joe (Jason Lewis, "Sex and the City"), an angel hip to all of Midnight's secrets; Lemuel (Peter Mensah, "True Blood"), a wise vampire in a rather unusual and symbiotic relationship with Olivia; Creek (Sarah Ramos, "Parenthood"), an aspiring writer whose family harbors a deep secret; and the Rev. Emilio Sheehan (Yul Vazquez, "Seinfeld"), a cleric swayed by the full moon.

When Aubrey Hamilton, Bobo's fiancée, is found dead in a creek, the victim of an apparent ritualistic slaying, suspicion immediately falls on Bobo. So the locals must band together to find out the truth behind the crime, among them Olivia.

Kebbel, whose roles have been mainly in dramas and comedies, saw in Olivia the chance to play an action heroine, a genre she's eager to get into.

"Olivia Charity is quite the woman," the actress says. "She's a hit woman. She's also considered to be the town protector along with Lem, who is the resident vampire, and Olivia and Lem are in a relationship together that is very deep and twisted and we'll explore that as the season goes on. And for me, what I love about bringing Olivia to life is that she continues to surprise me. She continues to bring parts out of myself that either I didn't know were there or I did know was there but was scared to bring out. And I feel like she allows me to be this strong, fearless, bold, sassy woman with no apologies and I love that."

The opening episode introduces viewers to the Olivia/Lem relationship in a scene that resembles a standard vampire-bites-victim-on-neck scenario, except there is no biting, no blood and both appear to gain something from the exchange.

"Leeching actually provides life for both of them in a special way," Kebbel explains, "because when it just gets too unbearable for her, Lem leeches the anger out of her and in turn that anger gives him energy so he doesn't have to go and feed on blood. So the exchange between them is I think a really beautiful thing."
